

IN MEMORIAM: ROBERT G. JAMES

1929–2009

Born a bare week before the stock-market crash of 1929, Bob James lived an incredible life. From early on he was not only an accomplished violinist in high school and talented athlete in college, but he was also an experienced pilot and forward-thinking scientist. He loved his country and fought for decades in the political arena to keep it moral and free. While he wasn't successful in saving his country, Bob was successful at translating his brilliant thoughts into real scientific inventions.

In 1955, on the Kern River in Central California, Bob tested his first “big” invention, a jet ski. It worked famously but Bob discarded the idea of patenting it since it seemed to be “obvious” technology, which under patent law cannot be patented. Years later, Kawasaki “invented” the jet ski but did patent it and went on to make a fortune.

Bob's other inventions included a huge automated canal-digging machine and a portable oil-well pumping machine that could be set up and knocked down in hours instead of the days that it then took to employ his competitors' equipment. He also designed and developed a new type of internal combustion engine that was extremely compact (about the size of a briefcase), of light weight, with only five moving parts and no need for a radiator but would generate 225 horsepower! He then went on to develop a turbine version that was even more powerful and advanced.

But Bob's greatest love among his many inventions was his light-therapy device. Developed, modified, and improved for more than thirty years, these devices were based on an entirely new technology, which Bob called “electro-magnetic bio-atomic resonance” or EMBAR. Always interested in health, Bob realized that energy could be transferred from an electromagnetic device to the human body via resonance coupling, and that the effect upon degenerative tissue could be profoundly healthful. Because of this unique method of exceedingly efficient energy transfer, the energy output of his James EMBAR devices needed only to be slightly higher than the energy levels of the target tissues themselves, thus making his devices very safe.

By re-energizing body tissues, Bob's devices could heal them. Third-degree burns would heal without scarring, while all of his treated cases of dry age-related macular degeneration (AMD) and retinitis pigmentosa would improve greatly. As a pain-relieving device, his EMBAR units were superb, especially on any inflamed tissue.

Prior to his death last August, Bob had even designed a variant EMBAR device for eliminating the herpes viruses from the body and another one that greatly reduced skin wrinkles. Sadly, he did not live to see these devices put into general use.

Bob was a long-time member and strong supporter of the National Health Federation. He was also an incredibly forward-thinking man with ideas far beyond his time. He will be greatly missed.

LAUGH OF THE WEEK, IF IT WEREN'T SO SERIOUS

When CNSNews.com recently asked House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-CA) where the Constitution authorized Congress to order Americans to buy health insurance, Pelosi dismissed the question by asking, “Are you serious? Are you serious?” Pelosi's press secretary later responded to written follow-up questions from CNSNews.com with a press release on the “Constitutionality of Health Insurance Reform,” which argues that Congress derives the authority to mandate that people purchase health insurance from its constitutional power to regulate interstate commerce.
